DRAMATIC STORY OF THE OIL LEASES

WILL HAVE TO BE RETOLD TO ANOTHER FEDERAL JURY

Juror No. 11, Edward J. Kidwell, Has Spilled the Beans and Has Made a Sorry Mess of One of the Most Costly Trials On the Docket of the District of Columbia—What He Told To the Grand Jury Has Not Been Learned, But Enough, That His Testimony Is of Doubtful Value

Another startling chapter in the dramatic story of the naval oil leases was closed Wednesday with the declaration of a mistrial in the hearing of criminal conspiracy charges against two of the foremost actors in the long drama—Albert B. Fall and Harry F. Sinclair.

A grand jury will write new history in its investigation of charges of jury tampering before the former interior secretary and the multi-millionaire oil operator and sportsman come to the bar of justice again for a new trial, probably in January.

Meantime, these principals in a celebrated case have been crowded completely out of the spotlight by a hitherto obscure young leather worker, who probably never has seen his name in print before this trial. He is Edward J. Kidwell, juror No. 11.

For fleeting minutes Juror Kidwell Wednesday morning sat in the jury box pale faced and trembling, the center of a thousand eyes, awaiting whatever fate might have in store as a result of charges that he had talked freely about the case against the orders of the court and had said that he expected to soon have an automobile "as long as this block."

Justice Frederick L. Siddons singled him out to inform him that certain affidavits touching his conduct as a juror had been presented to the court and that he could read them. That was all from the court for the time being, and if Justice Siddons contemplates any contempt proceedings he has given no indication of that intention.

Immediately after Kidwell emerged from the grand jury room, A. Mason Day, vice president of the Sinclair Exploration Co., went in for a third time. He was out in about ten minutes and told inquirers that he had refused to testify further, standing on his constitutional immunity that his testimony might tend to incriminate him. He, too, agreed to return to court.

While these stirring events were developing at the District of Columbia supreme court room, Albert B. Fall issued a statement from his apartment at the Mayflower hotel, saying that he was ready for a retrial immediately and expressing regret that the government found this impossible.

"I was prepared to completely refute the charges against me and I entertained no doubt whatever but that a verdict of acquittal would be rendered," said Fall.

This brought a statement from Owen J. Roberts, of special oil counsel, that the government also was ready for a new trial, but that since all of the witnesses had been excused and would have to be again summoned, a retrial would be impossible before January as it would take from six to eight weeks to serve the subpoenas.

Declaration of a mistrial was generally expected, and consequently speculations turned on what Justice Siddons would do with Kidwell and whether the grand jury would have a report ready on the charges of efforts to tamper with the jurors.

Accompanied by Mrs. Fall and his daughters, Fall was on hand early and chewing on his little black cigar stood in a corridor talking with friends until a few minutes before court time, 10 a. m. Then he went into the room where once before a jury had acquitted him on a conspiracy charge.

Dressed in a natty dark blue suit, Sinclair came in jauntily a few moments later, bowed to a friend here and there, passed thru the swinging gate separating the court jurors, defendants and counsel from the spectators; stepped over near the jury box and tossed his light gray slouch hat onto a nearby window sill, then seated himself between his lawyers, George P. Hoover and Martin W. Littleton.

When the jurors filed in, all eyes were centered upon Kidwell, a slender youngster with a shock of black wavy hair and dark eyes. His face almost matched the paleness of his collar.

He took his usual place in the front row as the jurors were seated. Instantly he turned his eyes on Justice Siddons, holding them there until court had adjourned 10 minutes later. Kidwell held his hands together in his lap, his whole body apparently tensed.

Justice Siddons began reading a paper setting forth briefly the events of Wednesday when the charges of jury tampering first came into the light and then calling Kidwell by name told him about affidavits in which he was named.

There was a straining forward of lawyers, reporters and spectators alike, all waiting to hear what the court had to say to the juror.

Turning from Kidwell, the justice resumed his reading saying that counsel for both the government and the defense had agreed that a mistrial would be necessary. He added that the fact that all matters connecting with the dramatic episode had been given the widest publicity was an added reason for declaring a mistrial.

Justice Siddons then dismissed the jury and the witness and adjourned court. The jurors literally had to fight their way from the box. They made headway slowly, but Conrad J. Herzog, juror No. 5, made his way to Roberts and on behalf of all those save Kidwell, expressed regret at the turn events had taken.

MISSIONARY WILL SPEAK AT MEETING

Tomorrow evening at 6 o'clock a congregational supper will be served at the Presbyterian church to which all members of the congregation are invited. After the supper the Rev. W. T. Locke, D. D. for thirty years a missionary in China, will be the speaker. Since his return from China several years ago Dr. Locke has been in great demand as a speaker. With a hint of Scotch accent and Irish wit he is a most engaging speaker. Few men have the statesman-like grasp of present day conditions. While the supper is limited to members of the congregation an invitation is extended to any who wish to avail themselves of the privilege of hearing Dr. Locke. The opportunity comes as a result of an educational campaign being staged in Columbus Presbyterian in which every church is being visited by some prominent speaker within two weeks. A large attendance is anticipated.

Splendid Job for Rainy Days Is to Repair Mow

A good job for rainy days is to put the floor of the hay mow in good condition. Any barn should have a good tight floor under the hay, not only for reasons of safety but to prevent hayseed and litter from falling down upon the live stock below.

An inspection should be made of the joists and other mow floor supports to see that they are holding up properly. If any undue strain is noticeable anywhere, take steps to see that the condition is remedied. If the floor is broken or has opened up as a result of heavy loading or dry rot, put in some new boards.

If there remains a mass of litter, chaff and seed from the past year's filling, clean it out carefully; throw it into the poultry yard, letting the chickens pick it over, or spread it over the pastures and lots, which will benefit from the seed it contains.

Agricultural Notes

Farmers seldom have trouble getting good prices for high-grade produce.

A heavy rain falling on a sloping field will carry away soil to an average depth of one-sixteenth of an inch.

Poultrymen usually make the most money when two-thirds to three-fourths of their flock are pullets each year.

Better breeding, better housing, better feeding, and culling are the stepping stones to success in poultry raising.

A good way to store seed corn ears is to cover them with dry threshed oats in a bin. They may be left until spring.

A good time to cut alfalfa is in the late afternoon because the sun will not wilt the leaves too quickly and cause them to shatter.

CLASSIFICATION OF INSURANCE.

There are two common and general classes of insurance—Stock Company insurance and Mutual insurance. (In this article we are dealing solely with insurance relating to automobiles), accidents and sickness.

Stock Company Insurance.
In stock company insurance the policyholder transfers his risk to an incorporated company, which company assumes ALL such risk in return for a fixed premium. The company's agreement in the assumption of such risk is guaranteed by capital paid in by the stockholders of that company, which capital must be maintained unimpaired so long as the company does business. The policyholders assume no liability; and in no event can they be subjected to assessment.

There is no form of insurance so sound as stock company insurance.

Mutual Insurance.
In mutual insurance the policyholder becomes a member of a company which agrees to assume the policyholder's risk, but there is no capital to cover payment of losses in excess of the premiums or deposits collected and each member assumes a contingent liability to assessment, if needed to pay excess losses, and each member (policyholder) assumes this contingent liability with or without limit, depending upon the terms of his policy, the charter of the company and the laws of the State which granted the charter. Consequently a mutual insurance policy, instead of being an asset, may become a liability—and sometimes a "whale" of a liability.

In other words, the risks, which in a stock insurance company are shouldered by the stockholders, in mutual insurance are borne by the policyholders.

Some mutual companies issue what is known as a "non-assessable" policy. It may readily be seen that as a mutual company has no capital, its method of obtaining funds to make up loss deficits must be thru the medium of assessment. If, however, the mutual company's policies are non-assessable, the very feature on which mutuals depend, is wiped out. And it needs to be realized that the validity of a non-assessable mutual policy is conditional. There is always danger that a so-called non-assessable policy may be held in fact to be assessable.

Some Do's and Don'ts.
In the purchase of any kind of insurance the purchaser should determine carefully not only the extent of protection promised but also the certainty of protection afforded him by the policy. One should view also with more or less skepticism any insurance that is offered largely on the basis of how cheap it is. It may be cheap to get in, but most expensive to get out.

Never sign an application for insurance without first carefully reading and fully understanding it. If such application subjects you to the assumption of new risks or liabilities or places you in a position where you may be subject to assessment, or causes to agree to abide by the rules of some association over which you have no control, then the only safe and sound rule to follow is: "Let it alone."

FINALLY—Read your policy—Ask questions—Buy sound insurance.
If you MAKE SURE you are getting what you think you are getting, if you select your insurance company on the basis of sound business principles, rather than on the basis of "cheapness" or of "good fellowship" then in case of trouble insurance will prove to be your best friend.

Odd Cure for Deafness

Joe Duree of Des Moines, Iowa, completely deaf, dropped 9,000 feet and was partly cured, but his dropping was done in an airplane and it was a treatment prescribed by several doctors. Duree's hearing was destroyed ten years ago, when he contracted influenza while serving in the army. Doctors advised this remedy in the hope that his eardrums would be jolted into sudden activity by a sudden change of atmospheric pressure. Duree plans another swoop to improve his hearing further.

King George's Title

The title of the king of England is "By the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions Beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India." It was recently stated that the English status of the British dominions necessitated a change in the title of the king. So far as we know, however, no official action has, as yet, been taken.

OF LEGENDARY LORE*Ancient Tales of the St.
Lawrence Kept Alive.

Montreal.—"I never knew that there was so much romance and legendary history connected with the St. Lawrence river," said A. C. Elworthy of Chicago, who just returned on the Empress of Scotland after a tour of the principal countries of Europe, including a river trip on the famous Rhine.

"The Rhine," he said, "is not as long or wide or picturesque as the St. Lawrence, although there are more castles and ancient buildings on it. But for beautiful scenery, mountains, lofty cliffs and farmlands I do not think there is any other river in the world to compare with the St. Lawrence."

"Legends and stories of long ago still haunt the shores of that 'sacred stream,' the river St. Lawrence, which was the first highway into the unknown continent of North America, the Middle West. A panorama of mystery and beauty was unfolded to the early-day explorers, such as Jacques Cartier, who sailed down the river forty-three years after America was discovered."

"After leaving that little bit of transplanted Brittany, Quebec, we pass the Isle Madame, where treasures were buried by early-day adventurers and pirates; then comes the Isle of Baccus, so named by Cartier because of the wild grapes he found there; Riviere-du-Loup, harking back to the time when packs of wolves frequented its banks, and then comes the lofty crags guarding the entrance to dark and austere Saguenay river. This is a region wherein was erected the first church in America, recalling the very origin of Canadian history."

Most Ancient Legend.

"I shall give a few of the legends of the country traversed by this mighty river."

"Two heroic figures, John Norton, a famous trapper of olden days, and Atla, last descendant of the Iberian or Basque people, appear in the most ancient of all Canadian legends. We see them flying for their lives before walls of searing flames on their way to Mamelone, the great sand mounds, believed to be the old geologic beaches of earliest time, that tower above the region we call Tadoussac. There on the shifting golden sands we are told that Basque fathers of the race that had dwelt immemorially among the mountains of Spain anchored ships 'before the years of men,' and that, later, savage battles were fought out between tribes and peoples now forgotten."

"It was at the period when great earthquakes appeared in this region, giving rise, for instance, to such a name as Les Eboulements, that a chief of the Lenni-Lenape Indians had married a Basque princess who died leaving a daughter, Atla, the last of the race. The doom following this intermarriage which, it was prophesied would bring ruin and extinction to the tribe, could only be averted by the birth of a child whose father was free of the 'cross of red and white.'"

"It seemed as though this might come to pass, for Atla and her English lover were on their way to the priest at Mamelone when their fate overtook them. No trapper sees the red hand-of-bush fire on the Laurentian hills without remembering their rush through the woods as hot as hell. Like burning arrows they sped along the ridge that edges the monstrous rock, called in a later day 'Cape Trinity.' And where the rock drops sheer they plunged into the black waters of the Saguenay, were rescued and taken to Tadoussac. But just as the holy man met them, with ring and book, 'a heavy shadow fell over the land,' and the earth took back the daughter of her old race."

"It is said that on that high crest, whose sands first saw the sunrise of the world, she kept beyond doom and fate, a symbol of old birthright in Canada."

The Phantom Head.

"Two centuries ago the canoe men at Pointe Levis led a dangerous life in winter crossing to Quebec in canoes or dugouts, and the legend of the 'Phantom Head' is still being told."

"On a cold wintry night one Peter Soulard, vainglorious and boastful, took a boatful of passengers from Levis to go to Quebec. They were all drowned in the ice jams except Peter and one paddler. However, later on Peter was caught in a knife-like wedge of ice, thin and keen, which struck him a blow in the neck. His head bounded off and slid away, leaving a crimson trail behind it, and today the legend goes that a sailor sometimes sees emerging from the pale darkness a slab of floating silver on which seems to move restlessly a dark, shapeless thing. It is Peter's head, the 'Phantom Head' of one who thought he could outwit the ice. And they who see it must die within the year, the legend goes."

Mrs. Holcombe's Technique

By EDGAR T. MONFORT

(Copyright.)

"IT'S a lie! The wicked don't flee and they aren't punished either!" Clarice Mackay burst into the room and dug her little fingers into the palms of her hands to keep from screaming.

"Have you lost your mind?" asked Alice Dalmain, calmly looking at her roommate. "For a bachelor girl you certainly lack the poise that is part of our creed."

Clarice merely gave her friend a withering glance, flung her hat on the table and herself into the deep chair by the window.

"But it's the third time this week!" she said after a moment.

"What's the third time this week?" asked Alice, glancing across at the slender little figure so fashionably clad in black georgette. Clarice was a lovely girl, Alice reflected, but terribly lacking in poise and so utterly dependent upon Jack Withers for her happiness, Alice amended more fairly.

"You know that little widow, Mrs. Holcombe?" Clarice went on. "Well, she was at the dance the other night and I like an idiot introduced Jack to her, and the minute she spoke to him I knew it was all up with me. I could see him falling for her right on the spot. She has that pitiful little girl oh-I'm-too-little-and-frightened-to-tocross-the-street-alone manner about everything she does. Oh, her technique is perfect. Don't fret, she's got him bound and gagged. I've seen her with him three times this week and I'll bet he's spent more money on her already than he has on me in all the two years he's known me. She's deadly. That's the dreadful part about it. If it were some little lonely girl I could almost resign myself thinking about how happy Jack was making her, but that thing goes after every man in sight. I know her! And when she sees me she's so sweet to me I could kill her; drags me into the drug store and treats me and gushes over me and simply ignores my icy manner. It's impossible to squash her. Oh, Alice, I'm so wretched I could die! And the worst is she's so attractive and vampish she could marry anybody, and then to go and take Jack away from me, and after I'd introduced him to her. She hasn't a conscience or a heart."

"Never mind, honey," soothed Alice. "Don't you pay any attention to her, and when Jack comes around be just as nice to him as ever. He'll get over it. A girl of that type can't hold a man—that is, not a sensible man—long. They'll all fall for her at first, but they soon find out there's nothing to her. He'll get over it before long."

"Get over it?" sneered Clarice. "You ought to see the adoring way he looks at her. He's head over heels in love with her, and she's just pulling him along for all she's worth."

"I wouldn't be too sure," said Alice, "and I'd let him see me with other men every chance I got. I'd go to dances and movies and anywhere I could."

"What heart have I to do anything?" said Clarice with exasperation. "I only want to die!"

But all the same she did take Alice's advice and a few weeks later found herself one evening at a party, one of a dozen guests, among them Jack and Mrs. Holcombe. Jack's manner was strained and he seemed embarrassed in Clarice's presence, but the little widow was her usual gay, playful self. When she saw Jack talking to Clarice she went over to him and tugged at his arm.

"Naughty boy," she teased. "Come away. You brought little Evelyn to the party and not Miss Mackay. I won't love oo any more, ever again!"

Jack flushed and looked silly. Somehow he felt that she had made a fool of him in the presence of his erstwhile sweetheart.

"Isn't he naughty, naughty, Miss Mackay?" she said, looking mischievously at Clarice.

"I don't think so," the girl answered in her most cheerful manner. "I think he's nice."

"Thanks, Clarice, you always were a trump!" said Jack warmly.

For the first time in Mrs. Holcombe's shallow little life she felt defeated. With a toss of her golden head she turned away from the two and joined another group across the room. Clarice was happier than she had been in weeks. She put a gentle hand on Jack's arm.

"You'd better go back to her, dear," she said kindly. "After all, you are her escort tonight."

"Yes, but darned if I'll ever be again. That is, if you'll take me back—for keeps this time," he said, turning away and going toward the widow.

The next day he called Clarice Mackay for a date, and now certain that she had won him back she told Alice all about the little incident of the night before.

"It seems to me the wicked generally punish themselves," said Alice thoughtfully. "She cooked her own goose that time by making him appear ridiculous in public."

"Maybe so," sighed Clarice. "but now I've got him back I don't care about anything."

REAL MEANING OF COUGHS IN CHURCH

Bishop Dickey said in a witty after-dinner speech in Waco:

"Church coughing is usually condemned, but I rather like it."

"Perhaps you know the story of the theater owner who went to sleep while a play was being read to him, and when the playwright woke him up and said reproachfully that he had been reading his play in the expectation of some valuable criticism, the theater owner yawned and smiled and said sleep was a criticism."

"By the same token, a young divine said irritably one Sunday to his sexton:

"The congregation's coughing quite spoiled my sermon this morning. Such coughs! Such volleys of coughs!"

"DUMB DORAS" NOT SOUGHT AS MATES

The theory that the dumb Dora is the most successful husband snatcher and that the female Phi Beta Kappa is necessarily an unloved blue stocking is an example of another fallacy gone smash on the rocks of scientific investigation. Drs. J. S. Rolin and S. J. Holmes have examined the records of 2,074 alumnae of the University of California graduated between the years of 1874 and 1910 to see whether the dumbest or the brightest totaled the greater number of matrimonial hits. In a report shortly to appear in the Journal of Heredity they state that of these, 1,160 were married and 914 were unmarried, this proportion being roughly the same as that known to prevail in several other colleges and universities. Investigation of the scholarship records showed that, contrary to general expectation, the grades of the married ranged a shade higher, .008 of a point to be exact, than those of their still unmarried sisters. The girls who made the honorary society Phi Beta Kappa, awarded to students of high scholarship, were divided about fifty-fifty among the ranks of the married and the single.

FARMER KILLED AND BODY LEFT TO HOGS

Flimsy Motive for Crime Seen by Officials.

Hot Springs, S. D.—Has a twenty year old boy, born and raised on a South Dakota farm, walked to the home of a neighbor three times his age, a man of reserved, peaceable habits, and at the edge of the man's own corn field, in broad daylight, killed him with a shotgun and left his body to be mangled by hogs released from their adjoining pasture. And has this crime been committed, not from any one of the three ordinary motives, for money, love or revenge, but merely to gain possession of a truck and a rifle?

The supposition seems incredible.

Yet Gerald Bowker, twenty years old, slight, round faced, boyish appearing, is in jail at Hot Springs, charged with the murder of Fred Tisner, fifty-eight, a bachelor, whose home is a few miles from that of Bowker's parents, highly respected farm folk who live near the village of Oral, on the prairies lying along the east side of the Black hills of South Dakota.

Trained and Arrested.

Bowker was followed by officers who started on his trail as soon as the mutilated body of Tisner had been discovered, several days after his death, and was arrested by the side of the girl wife whom he married last June. They were riding on a truck bearing the license number of Tisner's truck. And in the truck were a shotgun and a rifle, the latter corresponding to the description of one Tisner always kept in his house.

Fred Tisner was a bachelor who, German born, came to America when seventeen years old, worked on farms in Iowa and about 20 years ago came to the southwestern part of South Dakota to "take up a homestead." He had tilled his ground, raised some stock, helped a sister back in Iowa who was left a widow with eleven children to bring up, and had in the years of his hard work, accumulated little money.

But this year he had 90 head of hogs which he was getting ready for market. They were kept in a pasture at one end of which was a shed, not far from his house. Near the house, also, was his cornfield and farther away his hay land.

Friday, August 26, Fred Tisner was seen by one of his neighbors about noon, driving a load of hay toward his house. He was never again seen alive, so far as is known, except by the one who killed him.

The Tisner buildings stand on a rise of ground and are visible for a considerable distance from several directions. But no one saw any unusual happenings about the place. No one knew that a tragedy had occurred at the quiet little farm until August 29, when a neighbor, Bert Thompson, came up to the house on his way to look after some of his cattle. On the edge of the cornfield, 50 yards or so from the house, lay Fred Tisner's body.

Rifle Is Missing.

The gate, made of three boards which slipped into slots, had been let down. Hogs had entered from their pasture and the body was mutilated almost beyond recognition. On the boards of the gate were blood stains. On the broken handle of a pitchfork firmly fixed in the haystacks were more blood stains. And in the chest of Tisner's body, when physician and coroner examined it, were not less than 25 wounds made by bullets from a shotgun.

In the stable were Tisner's four horses harnessed. From the shed between two corn cribs his light truck, always kept there, was missing. And from his house was missing the .22 caliber rifle which he was known to keep there habitually.

That was about all there was to be learned on the place. But officers soon heard of a truck answering the description of Tisner's which had passed along a road leading east, toward the Badlands.

On the second day of the pursuit the truck was overtaken. In it were the boy and girl couple. Bowker declared he had traded for the truck with a stranger and was on his way to a locality called Cuny Table to do trucking. He had no money on him and had stopped a day on the trip to work for money with which to buy gasoline. In the truck were a rifle and a shotgun.

Bowker and his wife were brought to Hot Springs and Bowker put in jail. His wife, questioned by officers, told that she was with her parents at Buffalo Gap when her husband came for her late in the day of August 26 and brought with him the truck he said he had traded for. They then started for Cuny Table.

Bowker was arraigned for murder and is held without bail.

English Girls Heavy Eaters, but Keep Thin

London.—English girls eat more than American girls, according to a London hotel and restaurant manager.

"The American woman does not order a luncheon—just a sandwich, a little chicken perhaps, and always iced coffee or iced water," he says.

The city stenographer who fed on currant buns and water has disappeared, he thinks. The London girl sits down to a proper meal. Although she eats more, she still keeps slim.

AMUSEMENTS

Remarkable incidents in American history, coupled with colorful romances, are to form the backgrounds of historical western dramas starring Tim McCoy, it has been announced by Louis B. Mayar, head of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio.

The almost sensational success of "War Paint," McCoy's first starring vehicle, has convinced the studio officials there is a big field for western stories of early historical frontier life. Hence plans were laid some months ago for production of these pictures on a much more lavish scale than disclosed by the initial McCoy production.

"In the making of western pictures," says Mr. Mayar, "we will film stories of historical interest along whatever line formed the western frontier at that particular time."

Something New

"By 'westerns' we do not mean the ordinary cowboy and Indian melodrama. It is our intention to get away from the cut-and-dried type of western, and yet present in our productions all the virility, daring and beautiful scenic backgrounds that have played so important a part in the success of western pictures."

McCoy's first picture, under the plans outlined by Mr. Mayar, is "Winners of the Wilderness" a story of the French and Indian war and embracing the many colorful incidents of the history of the times.

One of the historical high spots of the production, now playing at the Met theater is the massacre of Braddock's legions on the ill-fated march toward Fort Duquesne, a military disaster that cost the lives and scalps of nine hundred English and Colonial out of a total force of thirteen hundred. That any escaped was due the military prowess of George Washington, then a young major of Virginia militia.

Joan Crawford has the feminine lead and Doy D'Arcy, famous crown prince of "The Merry Widow" is seen as the "heavy."

OUT-OF-TOWN BUYING

DIFFERENT ATTITUDE TOWARD THE TOWN

MUNICIPAL PROSPERITY

William J. Jingle

The road to prosperity is steep enough without having any obstacles put in our way which would make progress still more difficult. The ideal situation wherein a town makes the grade is where all its citizens join willingly in the task of clearing the road and making it easier for the community to get ahead.

We all know the dangers which beset town progress. Perhaps the chief of them is an indifferent attitude on the part of its residents, for when the people don't take an interest in their own city it can't do anything else but stand still. Born of this attitude is the failure to support local trade and the destructive criticism which makes the barrier against progress complete.

Circleville's hope for making further headway toward the goal of a greater municipal prosperity rests in its ability to overcome the obstacles which every town faces on its journey upward. The responsibility is up to its residents.

Monster Sharks

Inhabiting the deep are two gigantic sharks, either one of which may reach a length of 40 feet. The basking shark is found in northern seas, occasionally straying southward to our coasts, and the whale shark seems to have its principal habitat in the Indian ocean, though stragglers have turned up as far away as the shores of Florida. One such mounted is on exhibition at Miami and will repay a visit to anyone who chances to be in that vicinity.

Put Leading Citizens'

Faces on Monument

By a woman artist's prank, the faces of prominent living citizens of Helsingborg, Sweden, have been carved as astronomical figures on a monument unveiled there to the memory of the Seventeenth century astronomer, Tycho Brahe. When, at the command of the Swedish crown prince, the celestial globe, surmounting the fountain, was unveiled, the spectators recognized the architect, G. W. Widmark, as the Bear Driver; the editor of the local newspaper as Perseus; the chairman of the board of aldermen as the Wagoner, while the sculptor of the figures, Miss Astrid M. Aagesen, had carved a portrait of herself as the Virgin. Other notables of the town have been immortalized as the Centaur, Hercules, etc. Even the city physician, C. B. Hallengren, who had most vigorously opposed the erection of the monument, has his face among the stars, but instead of the expected caricature, the likeness is good.

Interior Color Harmony Extends To Blankets

(c) Esmond Mills

FOR the housewife who would carry the period idea of bedroom furnishing to a distinctive and harmonious conclusion, there are available blankets which, by their color and design, furnish the necessary touch for a room absolutely "in character."

The strong plaid and stripe design of the blanket in the above picture serves to further carry out the romantic boldness and simple lines of the Spanish or Italian furnishings. A suggested color would be a brown and white plaid which would be in complete harmony with the soft brown of the furniture and emphasize strongly the Old World idea of mellow interior decoration. At the foot of the bed, a blue blanket makes an effective note, especially if it repeats the color of floor coverings or hangings.

Horn Lets Youth "Blow Off Steam"

MORE comes out of a horn than music, or in other words the advantages to the boy or girl who plays in the school band or orchestra are not confined to the musical education and good times he gets out of doing it. College presidents, professors and directors of music all attest to the far-reaching profits which such training give the student. Out of 157 of such authorities co-operating in a survey made by the Conn Music Center, 154 specifically mentioned the character-building quality of music study. Learning to play an instrument calls for perseverance; self-discipline, patience, poise are some of the sterling qualities it develops.

In line with these is the spirit of co-operation, of team work and the learning to subordinate one's own interests for the sake of the group which many a boy or girl learns for the first time when he joins the school band or orchestra.

The cultural advantages received second emphasis—the ability to enjoy good music as well as the other arts. A little actual experience in playing gives the greatest understanding of the problems of the professional musician and an appreciation of his genius. Equally valuable is the so-called mental training which playing in a band or orchestra affords the young student.

Improved health is still another advantage, induced by relaxing the nerves, improving the posture and expanding the lung capacity which various types of music study involve. Financial awards, too, are coming to the young musician who earns pocket money, opens a savings account or even earns his way through school by playing or teaching some musical instrument.

Speaking of the relation of music to health recently, Senator Royal S. Copeland, formerly health commissioner of New York City, said: "I think there can be no doubt that education in music adds to the happiness and general welfare of the individual. The rhythm and pleasurable emotions excited by inspiring music have their effect on the health. It is not alone the increase of lung capacity from the blowing of a cornet or other wind instrument, but it is the general sense of well-being and stimulation associated with the enjoyment of music which has to do with its value. The purpose of exercise is to stimulate the action of the heart. Pleasurable sensations will accomplish exactly the same result."

Music, High Grades, Go Hand in Hand

THAT there is a definite connection between the study of music and grades made in other subjects would seem to be true, according to an interesting survey recently made of the high schools in Springfield, Mo. Several interpretations of these findings are possible, says the Conn Music Center in analyzing these figures, but all of them tend to show that the student who studies music is considerably more ahead in his grades than the average for the school body as a whole.

Four high schools were studied in the survey, and the average grades of those in each school who studied music were compared with the general average for that school. The increase ranged from 2.4 to 3 points on the basis of a hundred per cent. Taking the average of music students for the four schools and the general average for the four schools, the difference is found to be 2.8 points in favor of the pupil who winds a bow or blows a horn.

Just what per cent of an increase this represents depends upon the base of comparison accepted, but that there is an advantageous difference is clear. The per cent of students in each school who are studying music varied from 18 to 22 per cent, and it is worth noting in this connection that the 18 per cent were found in the school drawing from the wealthier section of the city while the poorest children were in the school having over one-fifth, or 21 per cent, at work on some musical instrument.

The late Henry T. Finck, in "My Adventures in the Golden Age of Music," published by Funk & Wagnalls, gave more evidence of the value of music in mind training. Said Mr. Finck: "Positive proof that music is the best mind-trainer has come from Magdalen College, where all the musical instruction at Oxford is given. There are many prizes and scholarships. Only ten per cent of the students at Magdalen take music, yet this ten per cent take seventy-five per cent of all those prizes and scholarships, leaving only twenty-five per cent for the other ninety per cent of the students. And this is not the record of one year, but the average of thirty successive years."

In the selection of band and orchestra instruments, the violin held first place, being used by 47 per cent of the pupils; cornet, second, with 25 per cent, and the clarinet and saxophone following with 17 and 11 per cent, respectively.

Violin Suits Co-Eds' Moods

THE co-ed knows her own mind and is not slow to make her preferences known. When she joins the college band or orchestra—and a survey just completed by the Conn Music Center involving 160,435 college and university students shows that one-fifth of band and orchestra players were women—she knows what instrument she prefers for getting musical training, gaining prestige in college or helping to pay her school expenses.

The violin ranks first place, according to the findings of this investigation. It is preferred by 22 per cent of these women. Piano comes second with 13 per cent; cello third, with 7 per cent. Cornet and flute follow with 7 and 6 per cent, respectively. The remaining 43 per cent is divided among the various other wind instruments, the harp, organ and those typically college instruments, the banjo and mandolin.

MORE FEED

Means More Winter Eggs Says Specialist.

"For winter eggs make hens eat more," says D. C. Kennard, head of poultry investigations at the Ohio Experiment Station. "A hen requires 5 or 6 pounds of feed a month just to live. For profitable egg production she must eat about a pound more."

To induce the layers to eat more, Mr. Kennard would feed a complete ration. A ration deficient in any respect lessens the fowl's appetite for feed.

Employ a mash the birds like. The palatability of a mash depends upon the ingredients and their quality. A mash of granular or coarsely ground material is more readily consumed than the same material finely ground.

Feed fresh mash daily in the evening in about the amount that will be eaten before the next feeding. The birds relish fresh mash and if it is fed in the evening they will go to roost with filled crops.

Suitable type feeders should supply 20 to 24 feet of eating space for each hundred layers. Reel mash feeders made 7 to 11 inches wide and 4 inches deep inside measure are used at the Station.

Milk in some form is a valuable and appetizing feed and usually induces greater feed consumption. Mash moistened with milk or water may prove beneficial if skillfully fed during the fall and winter months.

The wet or moistened mash may be fed just before the hens go to roost, although some prefer to feed it about noon. In either case it must not be permitted to spoil.

Village Has Long Name

There is a place in Wales known as Llanfair P. G. The spelling usually given is Llanfairpwllgwyngyllgogerychwyrndrobil-llandysillo-gogoch. It signifies: "Church of St. Mary, in hollow of white hazel, near a rapid whirlpool and near St. Tysilio's church, which is near a red cave."

Record for Potatoes

The Department of Agriculture says that the weight of the largest potato recorded in their office is between seven and eight pounds. There may have been larger ones produced, but the department has no record of them.

Her Idea of the Heroes

By DOROTHY DOUGLAS

(Copyright.)

NADINE was so delighted with the snapshots she had so luckily managed to get of the famous young airman at the moment he took the air for his epoch-making flight that she just longed to have his mother see them.

She was going back home next day after a most charming visit with her sister on Long Island, and her home town was just a short motor distance from that of the young airman's mother.

Nadine felt that Mrs. Crawford, whom the newspapers said was anxiously waiting news of her boy, would be quite overjoyed to see the very good pictures of her son.

By the time Nadine reached home of course the news had flashed back that the intrepid airman had accomplished his feat of daring safely.

Mrs. Crawford received Nadine with true Western hospitality and came near to weeping at the very human kindness which Nadine's act had shown.

"You see, I have precious parents of my own," said Nadine, "and know just exactly how they would love snapshots of me if I were in the midst of hundreds of thousands of admiring people and—a hero or rather heroine."

"They no doubt love you just as much for being a dear sweet daughter. I should love Dick just as much if he were only a simple boy and not the hero of the hour."

And then through the doorway came the other son—the one who was neither a hero nor yet an even robust type of man. In fact, as Nadine looked at him her heart felt pity. Somehow, Ralph Crawford gave the impression of laboring under tremendous odds.

"Miss Walden, this is my second son. Ralph dear, Miss Walden has brought some excellent snapshots of Dick which she took just as he started his flight. Wasn't it sweet of her?"

Ralph Crawford shook hands grudgingly with Nadine. In his eyes was an expression that Nadine could not quite define. Was he jealous of the feats his brother was performing and all the adulation he was bringing about himself or was it just self pity, a pity born of the fact that his body was not strong enough for the courage great enough to adopt a career of daring.

"Good old sport," said Ralph and looked fondly at the young Dick smiling at the crowds below him as his plane swept away from the earth, "that's a brother to be proud of."

And Nadine knew her first surmise had been wide of the mark. Ralph Crawford worshiped his brother for the very things that he himself could never attempt to do. He scorned himself for being a stay-at-home man who made his living at an office desk.

"I am thankful I have one boy at home," laughed Mrs. Crawford. "I sometimes wish with all my heart that Dick would give up flying and come and live at home." And she put her arm about Ralph's big shoulders. "I don't know what life would be to me if it weren't for Ralph. He's such a comfort—this boy of mine."

Nadine looked into the somewhat hurt and wistful eyes of Dick's brother and said softly: "I don't think there's any career in the whole world can equal that of the man who remains beside his own mother and gives to her the every-day help and comfort and care that she has through many long years given to him. Even his companionship is a blessing so great that he cannot understand it—it is only the mother who knows—and appreciates it."

And down in the very depths of that stay-at-home son's eyes a warm glow was kindled. His face was transformed, and if Mrs. Crawford swallowed a lump in her throat it was because this strange young girl had expressed so swiftly and so sweetly the very things she had tried many times to say to Ralph. She put her arm round Nadine and led her and the big son toward the dining room.

"And now we are going to have a cup of coffee and some of my fresh doughnuts and chat about this very subject. I have told Ralph so many times that home would just be nothing at all to me if he were away off trying to do stunts with the elements. I couldn't have a car because I can't drive, nor a garden because it is too hard work—nor any joy rides into theaters nor in fact a home at all, as I couldn't live alone."

"Well, mother, you certainly would be in a bad way without a son," laughed Ralph, and it was the heartiest laugh his mother had heard for a long time.

"I know just how you feel, Mrs. Crawford," put in Nadine, "because I should certainly not want a husband who was going to be everywhere except at home. All these wonderful, brilliant men who pioneer are very badly needed and they deserve all the adulation they get, but I can't see what fun it is for the person they are married to nor to the loving family who long for their companionship more than all the world's praise. No, three," finished Nadine. "I want a companion and not a hero when I marry."

The big shy stay-at-home son cast a swift glance at her and hardly did he realize how utterly adoring that glance was.

Lesson for November 6

AMOS PLEADS FOR JUSTICE

LESSON TEXT—Amos 5:1-21.
GOLDEN TEXT—Let judgment run down as waters and righteousness as a mighty stream.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Treating Every Body Right.

JUNIOR TOPIC—The Kind of Man God Hates.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—A Squaring for God Against the Crowd.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Conditions of Divine Approval.

I. Israel's Declination Predicted (vv. 1-3).

Amos lamented over the doom which was to overtake the nation Israel is called a virgin because she had never been subdued by any foreign nation (see Isa. 23:12). Her falling to rise no more sets forth the utter desolation and helplessness to which the Assyrians subjected the nation. From this captivity Israel never returned. Those who came back from the Babylonian captivity were largely from Egypt.

II. The Call to Return to God.

God through the prophet says, "Seek ye me and ye shall live." The implication is that while the divine judgments are not executed, an opportunity is offered for them to turn to God. In their turning to God they were to renounce:

1. Idolatry (vv. 5, 6).

They were to turn away from the places of idolatry—Bethel, Gilgal and Beersheba. God's judgment was to strike these places.

If they would not come to Him for life He would be their destroyer. "Our God is a consuming fire." The only one who can give life to those who seek Him is the one who shall destroy. 2. Cease to pervert judgment (v. 7).

"Turn judgment to wormwood" implies the bitterness of the perversion of justice to the injured.

3. Cease to dethrone righteousness.

"Leaving off righteousness" is thought to mean that unrighteousness was allowed to take its place. In this third exhortation the Lord's name is given with the following statement of some of His works:

1. "Maketh the seven stars and Orion." 2. "Turneth the shadow of death into morning." 3. "Maketh the day dark with night." 4. "Calleth for the waters of the sea and poureth them out upon the earth," both in rain and deluge; 5. "Strengthened the spoil against the strong."

III. The Sins Committed by the Wicked Nation (vv. 10-13).

1. They hated the judge who condemned their wicked practices (v. 10).

2. They abhorred him that spoke uprightly (v. 10).

This most likely referred to the prophets themselves who told them of their sins and urged uprightness of life.

3. They trampled upon the poor (v. 11).

4. They afflicted the just (v. 12).

This they did by taking a bribe.

5. They turned aside the poor in the gate (v. 12).

Because they had no money the poor were turned aside.

It was most difficult for the poor to get justice. The times were so evil that the prudent would best keep silence.

IV. The Conduct of the Righteous (vv. 14, 15).

No condition in the world, religious, social or political can become so difficult that the righteous are shut out from help. The righteous can:

1. Seek God (v. 14).

Those who seek good shall have with them the Lord God of Hosts.

2. Hate the evil (v. 15).

Evil must be hated. The sin question must be settled before God can bestow His blessings.

3. Establish judgment in the gate.

It was the custom in that day for the courts of justice to sit in the gate of the city. The prophet urges upon them the responsibility to place honorable men in charge of public affairs.

V. The Judgment to Fall (vv. 16-20).

There is coming a day of retribution. Justice and right shall be vindicated. This will be realized in the day of the Lord (II Thess. 1:7-10; James 5:7). All wrong shall be righted at that time. May we earnestly pray, "thy kingdom come."

VI. Worship Without Holiness of Life an Abomination to God (vv. 21-27).

Sacrifices, observance of feast days and singing, when the heart is out of fellowship with God, is most displeasing to Him.

Two Different Things

The love of God and the world are two different things. If the love of this world dwell in thee, the love of God forsakes thee; therefore that which receives this; it is fit that the love should have the best place and acceptance.

House Not Made With Hands

The tent-life is the true life; the building of God, the "house not made with hands," is reached.—Phillips Brooks.

Then What Did He Get?

Three-year-old James cared not a little for the freshly baked cakes which his mother was taking from the oven. "The little one is yours, Jimmy," she said, as she hurried to answer a telephone call. When she returned to the kitchen her dismay was evident when she said, "Why, James, what has happened to my cake?" "It was too long. I broke off the end for you, mother," was his answer.—Indianapolis News.
